Educational Programs: All:Academic program coordination

For each major in a degree program, the institution assigns responsibility for program coordination, as well as for curriculum development and review, to persons academically qualified in the field. In those degree programs for which the institution does not identify a major, this requirement applies to a curricular area or concentration.

For each major, curricular area, or concentration, Angelo State University assigns responsibility for program coordination and for curriculum development and review to persons academically qualified in the field.

PROGRAM COORDINATION

Degree programs at ASU are housed within the academic departments, and primary responsibility for program coordination rests with the department chairpersons. Academic department chairpersons are tenured or tenure-track faculty with several years of experience in higher education and suitable academic credentials. Some multidisciplinary departments also have academically qualified program coordinators that oversee areas or programs within the department.

Department head was a permanent position. Starting in fall 2012, department chairpersons will be appointed for three-year terms by the provost and vice president for academic affairs on the recommendation of the dean of the appropriate college. The chairperson, in cooperation with the faculty, is responsible for supervising activities of the department, scheduling classes, assisting in faculty evaluations, preparing budget requests, initiating appointment recommendations, developing the curriculum, and supervising assessment activities (ASU OP 06.01, Academic Deans and Department Chairpersons; note that until spring of 2012, when the new OP 06.01 went into effect, chairpersons were department heads with unlimited terms).

Several colleges and departments at ASU were reorganized in the summer of 2011, resulting in the merging of some departments and the elimination of others as separate units. The chairs of those departments that were eliminated and merged were given the title "Program Director" and have secondary responsibility over the program areas that were part of their former departments. For example, the Department of Modern Languages was merged with English to create the Department of English and Modern Languages. Dr. Karen Cody, former chair of the Department of Modern Languages, is now the Modern Languages Program Director. These coordinators are listed beneath the department chairpersons in the section below entitled "Academic Program Leadership."

ASU has several interdisciplinary degree programs, including the Bachelor of Interdisciplinary Studies (BIS); the Bachelor of Science (BS) in Interdisciplinary Studies, with various teaching concentrations; the BS in Food Animal Science and Marketing; and the BS in Natural Resource Management. The requirements for these various degree programs are distributed among the units responsible for the content in each major. See, for example, the degree requirements for the BS in Interdisciplinary Studies in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction (ASU Undergraduate Catalog 2011–2012, p. 137). The Bachelor of Interdisciplinary Studies (BIS) degree is under the umbrella of the College of Arts and Sciences and is composed of three minors, rather than a single major. The responsibilities for the various minors fall to the appropriate departments (ASU Undergraduate Catalog 2011–2012, pp. 348–349). The Master of Arts in Multi-Disciplinary Studies, overseen by the Graduate College, has been eliminated and will be taught out by August 31, 2015.

CURRICULUM DEVELOPMENT AND REVIEW

ASU faculty and administrators approve each academic program and its curriculum. Proposals for curricular change and new degree programs originate at the faculty level and are reviewed by faculty committees in accordance with the policies and procedures defined in ASU OP 04.05, Approval Process for New Degree Programs. The Request for Curriculum Change form, an attachment to ASU OP 04.05, specifies which administrators and faculty committees are required to review and approve different types of curricular change. Minor curricular changes—such as changing a prerequisite within a department or modifying a course description—must be approved by the appropriate department chairperson and dean, the registrar, and the provost and vice president for academic affairs. More significant changes—including course and program additions or deletions—must also be approved by the relevant College Curriculum Committee and, where appropriate, the Teacher Education Council (for changes involving teacher certification programs), the University Core Curriculum Committee (for changes to the core curriculum), and/or the Graduate Council (for changes in graduate curricula). All significant curricular changes are also reviewed by the University Curriculum Committee.

All of the curriculum-review committees are composed of faculty members who have the education and experience necessary to ensure that ASU degree programs demonstrate appropriate course content, sequencing, and linkages among program components (see also Core Requirement 2.7.2, Program content; Comprehensive Standard 3.4.1, Academic program approval; and Comprehensive Standard 3.4.10, Responsibility for curriculum). Each College Curriculum Committee, for example, is composed of the dean of the college, the department chairpersons, an additional faculty member from each department, and a representative from the library. Departments offering teacher certification programs are represented on the Teacher Education Council by the department chairperson, and the dean of the College of Education serves as chair. On the Graduate Council, departments offering graduate majors are represented by a senior graduate faculty member other than the department chair, while departments offering minor programs are represented by the department chair. The dean of the College of Graduate Studies serves as chair of the Graduate Council. More information regarding the appointment and responsibilities of these committees is provided in ASU OP 04.01, Angelo State University Councils and Committees and ASU Committees and Councils 2011–2012.
