

HISPANIC HERITAGE CELEBRATION

CUBA

With Sept. 15–Oct. 15 designated as Hispanic Heritage Month, the Multicultural Center celebrated the culture of Cuba on Sept. 18. The more than 270 students in attendance enjoyed a taste of Cuban cuisine along with educational posters on the country's culture, government and history. Activities included a cigar bar, which allowed students to make cigars from Rolo candy bars, and also illustrated the economic impact cigar sales have on Cuba. Students were also able to simulate the government food rationing program by using "la libreta" to receive the Cuban dishes offered at the event. Entertainment included a salsa dancing routine from instructors Angel and Dorothy Noriega.

DID YOU KNOW...

Beautifully protected natural areas take up nearly 22 percent of Cuban territory, providing habitats for crocodiles, flamingos, orchids and more.

A note from Dr. Brian May ASU President

Without a doubt, cultural diversity is at the root of American exceptionalism, as well as the distinctive nature of Texas itself. The blending of various cultures throughout our nation's and state's history touches our lives daily in everything we do, from the vibrant political system we participate in to the cuisine we eat to the music we enjoy.

Likewise, Angelo State University benefits from cultural diversity by its broadening of the academic and co-curricular horizons of our students. For instance, the influx of students from South Korea has helped us all have a greater appreciation for that country, which has long been one of our strongest allies and economic partners. Further, ASU's designation as a Hispanic Serving Institution has reaffirmed the importance of the Hispanic culture to our institution and to our society as a whole.

ASU's Multicultural Center plays an important role on campus in reminding us through various programs and activities of the role of various peoples in contributing to the cultural tapestry that has led to the great success of this nation, this state and this university. We are all richer on this campus as a result not only of that cultural diversity, but also ASU's Multicultural Center.

I was raised by a single mom who I admire. From nights with having hardly anything to eat on our table to nights where we traveled to escape reality, I have lived through many good and bad situations. I value diversity in the sense that I practice it from the second I wake up to the second I close my eyes. I walk around curious as to what others have gone through and why they make choices that they make, despite their reasoning. I walk around others smiling, to give them a green light to know that I am humble, friendly and open to their personalities and differences. The value of diversity could go a long way and unite others, reduce violence and stereotypes, and create a beautiful peaceful world.

LENDING LIBRARY HIGHLIGHT

“Into the Beautiful North”

A work of fiction by Luis Alberto Urrea, 331 pages

This year, the San Angelo community, in collaboration with ASU's Common Read program, is enjoying the picturesque novel, “Into the Beautiful North.” In this fantastical tale, author Alberto Urrea portrays his perspective of Mexican-American heritage, life in a small town in Mexico, the borderland and the transition of coming into the United States. The author provides an interesting journey, often employing a unique blend of English and Spanish descriptions, as well as humor to underline the seriousness of the themes. The main character, Nayeli, becomes a larger-than-life heroine who challenges the many obstacles in her young life. This novel, like many other stories, proves that the journey is sometimes more important than the destination.

Join us in this reading adventure. Urrea's novel is here at the Lending Library.

We need to help students and parents cherish and preserve the ethnic and cultural diversity that nourishes and strengthens this community—and this nation.
