CUL 3312 Cultural Competence: Making Sense of the World II

Course Description/Overview

The course "Cultural Competence: Making Sense of the World II" is a continuation of CUL 3310 that extends its analysis of cultural diversity in the world, how culture relates to specific security issues, including the historical relationships between military power and politics, and how cultural understanding is essential in influencing outcomes in a variety of security contexts.

The course explores the linkages between culture, politics and the military through reviewing and analyzing strategic cultures of selected regional powers and key players in Europe, Middle East, Asia, Africa and Latin America. Through analyzing the historical, linguistic, religious, political and economic aspects of the cultural identities of the nations we aim at defining the region- and case-specific peculiarities of their strategic culture and behavioral patterns of their military units. This will help in better understanding the multi-cultural world around us and the visions and ways of live of different nations.
