Psy 4391

Research in Psychology

Description: A specialized course that may be directed reading or research for superior students majoring in psychology. This course seeks to provide an integrated blend of content and methodology, with methods discussed in the context of actual research, including practice in planning, conducting, and/or reporting laboratory, field, or library research.

Assessment: Students will receive grades based on their performance of research tasks, and based on a final paper over the semester’s project.