

Laurence F. Jones
Professor of Government

Laurence F. Jones is Professor of Government at Angelo State University, where he has served since 1990. Professor Jones is the co-author of Political Science Research: A Handbook of Scope and Methods with Edward C. Olson. He has also coauthored numerous journal articles dealing with minority representational change in Texas City and county governments, the politics of early voting in Texas, political party realignment in Texas county government, and the extent of capital budgeting in Texas. Professor Jones regularly teaches undergraduate courses in Federal and Texas state government, Urban Politics and Policy, The Mass Media, Society, and Public Policy, and The Scope and Methods of Political Science. Professor Jones also teaches and leads graduate seminars in Public Personnel Management, Urban Politics, and Administrative Methods. In addition to these activities, he is co-editor of The Journal of Borderland Studies and is an active researcher in several policy areas including public safety, urban affairs, and race relations.