1181 Freshman Seminar (1-0). This course is designed to introduce incoming freshmen to the intellectual and cultural environment of the university and the impact it will have on their lives as students. Freshman Seminars incorporate various integral elements in order to facilitate first-year students’ transition from high school to college-level learning. Emphasis will be on communication, critical thinking, and information literacy. Open to all majors; restricted to and required of first-time-in-college students.

Course Objectives: GS 1181 “The Western and American Cultural Values.”
No other popular cultural genre has been so identified with America as the Western. The settlement of the frontier has been called a uniquely American experience, and the one that most defined what it meant to be an American. By the end of the nineteenth century, the Western had become ingrained in the American imagination, and decades of children imagined themselves in the position of their pulp and celluloid heroes. The heroic cowboy/gunfighter came to embody masculinity, honor, freedom, and fair play. Always on the side of justice and ready to defend the weak, the cowboy embodied our best vision of ourselves. Hollywood movies projected this image across the nation and around the world. Until the late 1960s and 70s, Americans had a voracious appetite for Westerns and the heroes they imagined themselves to be. But the swaggering certainty in America’s unquestionable moral and cultural superiority began to collapse in the face of an unpopular war in Vietnam and the complaints of peoples who felt the conquest of the West had been disastrous. In the 1970s a series of revisionist Westerns questioned the celebratory narrative of traditional westerns and often recast the heroes as villains. By the 1990s, critics proclaimed the Western as dead, but has it really died or did it merely head out to new frontiers? This class will explore the enduring mythology of the Western and its influence on the American Cultural Experience.
