GS 1181.F64: Sports Champs and Their Sponsors

COURSE DESCRIPTION/OVERVIEW

In this course, students will read various articles and books that describe the journeys of those athletes who have reached high points of success in sports, as well as the marketing efforts that have communicated their achievements in order to promote products and services. This course will include article and book research on various sports champions, by each student, with a class presentation by each student of an athlete of their choice. The application of these skills will help improve and develop research, writing, and presentation skills necessary for success at the university level.

Like many, the instructor was introduced to sports at a young age in the city of Houston, where she became so passionate about running that she followed her dreams to Angelo State and joined the cross-country/track teams. This ASU professor led both the 1989 and 1990 ASU Cross-Country teams to Lone Star Conference and South Region CC Championships; these ‘Belles hold the honor of being the first ASU cross-country women’s team to qualify for the NCAA Division II National Meet – and doing so with the extraordinary feat of scoring a perfect 15 in both championship meets!

Years later, this ASU professor followed another passion in the sport of taekwondo where she competed regularly at national tournaments in the American Taekwondo Association, the world’s largest martial arts organization. As a first degree and third degree black belt, she held the title as World Champion in 2007 and 2011, in weapons and sparring.

The thirst for success is hard to quench for many. In this course, students will explore sports champions and the unique and various avenues taken in their journey for gold. Students are encouraged to share personal experiences and class findings through written/oral presentations.
