Required Texts: Ethics, Theory and Contemporary Issues, Barbara Mackinnon, 9th edition with readings, Wadsworth, 2016. This text is absolutely necessary and students should purchase a copy before semester begins. Buying the text after week 2 or 3 weeks will leave you insufficiently prepared for the first tests.

Lectures (?) The Ethics face-to-face class is not taught as a lecture class so there are no lectures for this course. However, I will post my own chapter by chapter notes on Blackboard each week on each of the Chapters from the textbook. There is a chapter reading from the textbook each week.

Course Description

Sometimes called MORAL PHILOSOPHY, ethics serves to introduce students to ethical dilemmas and how philosophy approaches these. This is the branch of philosophy that questions what is good and bad, and why certain actions are right or wrong. In this class we will deal with questions such as the relation between ethics and religion? Can we have one without the other? And what is ethics? Are there universal moral principles? Should all human beings have the same moral values? How do we know what is right? Where do our moral values come from; reason? Emotion? Experience? The senses? Or perhaps morality is produced by culture and convention, or from social acculturation? Is an action good or bad in itself? Does it depend on our intentions? In the first half of the course students will gain conceptual tools, and philosophical understanding by learning something of the ethical systems of the Western philosophical tradition, such as moral relativism, utilitarianism, Kantian ethics, and virtue ethics. In the second half of the course you will apply your knowledge of ethical theories and systems to analyze and evaluate topical controversial issues such as euthanasia, abortion, economic justice, environmental responsibility, cloning, animal rights, violence and war.

The Class

Because of covid-19 the course is taught entirely online for the Spring of 2021.

Assessment

8 Multiple Choice quizzes, (6.25% each) Ten multiple choice, true/false questions for each test on the chapter(s) of the week.

Note: Quiz settings; 30 mins to complete, no backtracking, force completion, only one question at a time displayed, only one attempt. (all course work must be completed for a final grade). These quizzes are not intended to be open book, you should complete the reading BEFORE attempting the quiz.

Papers

Two papers; one midterm and a final (25% each).

You will be expected to write an answer of about 800-1000 words. There will be 3 or 4 questions to choose from and these will be made available on Blackboard. All papers should be submitted to Blackboard. The main reason why students under-perform with regard to papers is that they do not engage with course material. Papers often tend towards 'stream of consciousness' with few references to what has been studied. It is expected in a philosophy class, even in an intro class, that you will have learned the philosopher's names and can accurately point to what ideas are associated with these philosophers, and how to deploy these ideas in a coherent fashion. Higher grades will be awarded to those who can do some of this. No internet sources on papers, course content only.
